PAINE'S LIFE.

On Monday last came on in the court of session of this city before the honorable Mr. Hoffman, recorder, the cause of the state against Mr. Cheetham, author of the Life of Thomas Paine, for a libel, alleged to be contained in that work, on the character of Mistress Bonneville, a French woman.

The following are the passages charged as libellous:

"Paine brought with him from Paris, and from her husband, in whose house he had lived, Margaret Brazier Bonneville, and her three sons; Lewis, Benjamin, and Thomas. Thomas has the features, countenance, and temper of Paine. Madam Bonneville arrived at Baltimore a few days after her paramour. Life, p. 226-7.

"In making his arrangements for a permanent residence amongst us, he contemplated the abandonment of Madam Bonneville, whom he had seduced from her husband in Paris, and brought amongst strangers! Beside his estate at New Rochelle, he had a small house and a few barren acres at Bordtown, New-Jersey. This little property, which he afterwards sold for seven hundred and fifty dollars, he proposed to give to her, and settle her upon it as a school mistress, but she resolutely and successfully resisted his unfeeling project. For a long time he represented her as the wife of his friend, a republican printer in Paris, with whom he had boarded; & who, disliking the new order of things under the first consul, was every day expected to emigrate to the United States. Those who believed him thought well of that kindness in which his friend's wife and her children had been lulled into the delusion, and convinced all who knew him, that to the crime of seduction, he was adding that of inhumanity."—Life, p. 234.

Note: "Before his return to the city, Madame Bonneville paid him a visit, and returned just at candle light. She told him she had an order which she wished him to sign, for clothing for herself and the children, who were all, in fact, nearly naked. She presented the order. Paine said 'I'll put it in my pocket and read it in the morning.' No, said she, you must sign it to night; I want to return and get the things to-morrow. I cannot read in the night; I'll keep it till morning. Then, said Madame Bonneville, with some temper, if you won't read it to night, give it me back.—Paine refused all her importunities. He kept the paper until the morning, when he found, that instead of an order for clothing, it was a bond, duly drawn, for seven hundred pounds. Quite enraged, he went to Mrs. Dean's, and told her the story, by whom, and by Mr. Carver, it is mentioned to me."—Life, p. 249.

"She (Mistress Bonneville) wished that he (Paine) was dead, but Mrs. Hedden cannot say whether it was to get possession of his property or that he might be rid of the pain with which he was tortured, and which he impatiently bore. She was soon gratified."—Life, p. 299.

The publication being admitted by the defendant, the question of libel or no libel, was brought immediately before the jury.

Mr. Sampson addressed the jury on the part of the prosecution, and went the usual round of dull remark on its importance. Without wish unnecessarily to injure the delicate feelings of this gentleman, we would observe, that when he is not grave he is queer, and if nature had been kind to him in voice and understanding, he would be witty, but that when he is serious, and on this occasion he was, it is his misfortune to excite an expectation which he never gratifies. Mr. S. told the jury, with his accustomed ingenuity, that Mistress Bonneville did not prosecute for money, a circumstance with which they could not have been acquainted had he not been so obliging as to inform them of it, and he was pleased to compare that Lady, the defendant and associate of the immoral & beastly, the drunken and blasphemous Paine, with the chaste and heroic Lucretia! He did not, however, carry the simile through, and liken

Mr. Cheetham to Tarquin, and for this it is probable, Mr. C. is thankful. Caesar's wife, he said was not to be suspected, and he might have added that no woman should be without good cause. Mrs. Bonneville comes before you, gentlemen, (said this droll man, like a fair, honest, virtuous, and spotless woman as she is, and once for her reputation.) She is a stranger in our land, came here to instruct our youth, pleased herself with the hope of enjoying her days among freemen, and did not expect to meet a tyrant. Her husband in Paris! Ha! what is he, and what might he have been? He is a ruined man, and yet had he trimmed and shifted and turned and flattered the emperor, he might have been a duke. Poor mistress Bonneville, did you but know how her tender heart is broken! If, gentlemen, there be justice—if you regard your oaths, said Mr. S. I believe you do, you will convict this man. Who is he? What has he published as editor? How many libels? Who has escaped his fury? Here the court interrupted Mr. S. declaring that it could not permit this licence of attack. After mouthing not a little impertinence to the court, which was properly noticed and repressed by the Recorder, Mr. S. read the charges in the indictment, as above set forth, made some becoming apologies for his poor abilities, and closed his address with judiciously expressing a hope that the defendant would be convicted.

Mr. Rose opened the cause of the defendant in a speech which was admired by all who heard it for its neatness and perspicuity, and which, though our limits do not permit us to give more than an outline of the trial, we regret it is not in our power to lay before the reader in the elegant diction in which it was clothed. Having stated in terms of approbation which we cannot repeat the motives of Mr. Cheetham for writing the Life of Paine, Mr. R. said there is so much truth in the adage—tell me the company you keep and I will tell you what you are—that he could not refrain from begging the particular attention of the jury to it. Mr. Sampson has told you that the lady surs for her reputation. A woman, gentlemen, that complains of the loss of reputation should, Mr. Rose observed, have had a reputation to lose. What could we think of the character of a mother, the wife of a man in Paris, who had placed herself and children under the protection of a man who, having raised to himself a column of of the earth, had wantonly and wickedly demolished it by waging an impious war against the King of Heaven? Yet my client had no wish to meddle with the character of this woman. That which he has published was communicated to him to communicate it to the public. He had nothing of the malice which is essential to a libel. He does not know madame B. whom he has never to this moment seen.—How then could he be actuated by malice towards her?—It was merely to illustrate the character of Paine, by stating his connexions with her, that she was introduced into the work at all. We all remember the late philosophical president Jefferson, who in his Notes on Virginia particularizes the murder of Logan's family by Cresap. Here Mr. R. cited the narrative of the murder, and repeated a part of Logan's celebrated speech. Mr. Martin, Mr. R. continued, publicly addressed several letters to Mr. Jefferson, in which he denied the truth of his statement respecting Cresap. In the appendix of a recent addition of the Notes, Mr. Jefferson investigates the complaint of Mr. Martin, and blames him for stepping at once into the newspapers, without having previously and privately enquired on what grounds the author had related the pathetic story. If Cresap was slandered, Logan, not Mr. Jefferson, was the slanderer, for Logan, in the delicious eloquence which he has left us, stated the circumstances of the murder to others, who had communicated them to Mr. Jefferson, in a manner which justified that gentleman in the propagation of them in the form in which they are now found. So of Madame B. If she be libelled, those who communicated the facts to Mr. Cheetham are as to warrant his statement of them, are the libellers. She ought therefore to have called upon Mr. Cheetham's informants, and, if there were ground for complaint, to have made them answerable. Yet when Mr. Emmet wrote to the defendant and pointed out to him on the behalf of madam B. what he considered as errors of fact, Mr. C. readily consented to correct them on the authority of Mr. Emmet. Did this show malice? What more could be expected? And here it was concluded that the matter was at rest. The required alterations were made in the work; new sheets were printed at considerable expence, and the old ones expunged from it. What then has dragged this settlement from its oblivion? Who advised the prosecution?

Has Deism no hand in it? Would to God we could bring the man to court who has prompted madame B. to this prosecution, and who advised Paine on his death-bed not to acknowledge his Saviour, lest Christians should triumph! Here Mr. R. was interrupted by Mr. Colden on the allegation that Mr. R. was going beyond the matter at issue. Mr. R. continued.—Think you this cause would have been brought into this court if Deism was not the basis of it?—The object of the prosecution is undoubtedly to suppress a work which—[Mr. R. paid some compliments to the work which the reader must excuse us for not repeating.] But we are told of the unfeelingness of bringing an innocent female before the public in an odious light. Yes, another Cleopatra is to be introduced upon the stage to grace a deistical triumph. And who is madam B.? Would to God her son was here to testify that he reproached her for lying with a man who had broken up the tranquility of his father's house! Here Mr. Colden again interrupted Mr. R. on the ground that this part of his opening was irrelevant, there being no testimony to support it. The court, reserving the question, decided that Mr. R. might proceed. Who is madam, for I will again, said Mr. R. ask the question? To this enquiry Mr. Colden again objected, as extraneous. What then was Paine, the household deity of madam B.? A man devoid of morality, a drunkard, and a blasphemer of our Saviour.—Was this an altar for a mother to teach her children to kneel at? Mr. R. concluded with observing that the only discoverable malice was in the prosecution, with repeating that the object of it was to suppress a work which alarmed the Deists, and with maintaining, that as the defendant had published nothing respecting madam B. which had not been communicated to him, which he did not believe to be true, and had reasonable ground for his belief, it was not guilty of a libel.

Mr. Carver being sworn, testified that he had told Mr. Cheetham, that Tom Bonneville has "the features, countenance and temper of Paine;" that Mistress B. had told him that Paine had induced her to come to this country; that Paine had told him, when speaking harshly of Mistress B. that she was not married to Bonneville, whom she called her husband; and the note in the Life, p. 249, respecting the bond, having been shown to him, he testified that it was mentioned to him by Paine, and that it was stated in the life as communicated by him to the defendant. To this Mr. Colden objected as not being legal evidence of the fact, and entered into an elaborate argument in support of his objection.—The court: The question of malice is the only one for the jury to try. This was admitted by Mr. Colden.—The court: The testimony is therefore admissible to shew the bona fide intention of Mr. Cheetham in relating the facts. An historian or biographer must have his facts from somebody or from something; he cannot be supposed to have a knowledge of them himself. The facts may be false in themselves in respect to Madame B. and yet Mr. Cheetham may have believed them to be true, and have had reasonable grounds for his belief. If this should be made out, Madame B. may be innocent and Mr. C. not guilty.—Mr. Carter proceeded.—His letter, included in the life, being shown to him, he acknowledged that he was the writer of it, and that he placed it in the hands of the defendant when he was writing the Life. He sent it to Paine in 1806, three years before his death.—Mistress Bonneville saw it, and threatened a prosecution; he offered to furnish her money for the purpose, but no prosecution was commenced. From this letter Mr. Griffin read the following extracts to the jury:—"I have often wondered that a French woman and three children should leave France and all her connexions to follow T. Paine to America. Suppose I were to go to my native country, England, and take another man's wife and three children of his, and leave my wife and family in this country; what would be the natural conclusion in the minds of the people, but that there was some criminal connection between the woman and myself? You have often told me that the French woman above alluded to, has never received one letter from her husband during the four years she had been in this country. How comes this to pass. Perhaps you can explain the matter."—Life, p. 303-3.

"I came according to order, and found you particularly engaged with the French woman and her two boys; whether the boys are yours I leave you to judge; but the oldest son of the woman, an intelligent youth, I suppose about 14 or 15 years of age, has frequently told me and others, that you were the complete ruin of their family, and that he despised you; and said that your character, at present, was not so well known in America as in France."—Life, p. 286. "You frequently boast of what you have done for the woman above alluded to; that she and her family have cost you two thousand dollars; and when you came the last time to York you have been bountiful to her and given her one hundred dollars per time. This may be all right. She may have rendered you former and present secret service, such as are not in my power to perform."—Life, p. 267-7. Mr. Carver was asked if he ever saw any meretricious or improper connection between Madame B. and Paine? He never did. Paine lived in Carver's and Mistress B. often came to see him. At one period they lived together at Paine's farm, at New Rochelle.

Mrs. Ryder testified that Paine lived at their house, where Mistress B. came frequently to see him. Tom Bonneville's eyes were like Paine's. She never saw any thing improper between Paine and her. She knew nothing herself against Madame Bonneville.

Mrs. Dean testified as to the Bond. She had heard the defendant and Carver talk about it, who asked her if he had not heard something concerning it? She said she had heard such a thing. What had she heard? Why such a thing. Do you know Mr. Cheetham? She had never seen him! Upon your oath what do you know about the Bond? I have heard such a thing! She lived in the neighborhood of Paine at New Rochelle and had heard such a thing. Mr. Carver was called in and asked whether the witness had not in his presence related to Mr. Cheetham what is stated in the note respecting the Bond, to which he answered in the affirmative.

The Rev. John Foster testified that he was well acquainted with Paine and Mistress B. to whom Paine allowed 2 dollars a week, and that he had borrowed 30 dollars of the witness towards the payment of the weekly allowance. In answer to the question, whether Mistress B. ever said any thing to the witness about Paine's seducing her from Paris, he answered that she had told him that she never would leave her country but for his promise, and that Paine was under the most sacred of obligations to support her and her children, but especially Tom.

Dr. Manley testified that Madam B. had expressed a wish that Paine was dead. This branch of the indictment was afterwards abandoned.

Peter Underhill of Westchester, testified that he knew Paine and Mistress B. and had dealings with the former, and that he once observed to Mistress B. that Tom Bonneville was very like Paine, to which she replied that he was Paine's child. The counsel for the prosecution called in Mr. Somerville, of Westchester, to impeach the credibility of Underhill. Mr. S. said that if he must speak as to his own knowledge he must say from a single transaction which he had with him, that his character was good—but if from the reports of some persons in the country (here he was stopped, such report being inadmissible as evidence.) Daniel Pelton was also called to impeach the credibility of Underhill, but he knew nothing himself against the witness.

Here the testimony for the defence was closed, the recorder having decided, with the concurrence and approbation of Mr. Colden, district attorney, that as the question of malice was the only one before the jury, it was unnecessary (and assuredly it was not the wish of the defendant, however strong or weak he was on this point,) to go into an examination of the character of Madame B. which might, as the court had already remarked, be irreproachable, and yet the defendant not be guilty.

Thomas Addison Emmet, Esq. was introduced to prove, from conversation which he had with Mr. Bonneville, that Mistress B. had left France with the consent of her husband.

* The defendant was introduced by Mr. Carver to Mrs. Dean by name, for the purpose, as she had been previously apprized, of hearing what she had to say as to the bond, in corroboration of Carver's information; and Mr. C. took down in writing in the presence of Carver and Mr. C. Southwick, who happened to be present, the words of Mrs. Dean and afterwards read them to her. Mrs. Dean told Mr. Cheetham, that Paine himself related to her in a great passion, all the circumstances as stated in the note concerning the bond. Mr. Cheetham has within the last two months been at the house of Mrs. Dean, at New Rochelle, saw her and conversed with her as Mr. C. on the pending trial; and is convinced that she is as well acquainted with his person, as any body in the city. He does not, however, assert that somebody on the part of the prosecution had been tampering with her. Her husband has an unsettled account with Paine's estate.

band, but his testimony was objected to as irrelevant, and the objection was sustained by the court, the character of Mistress B. not being before the court.

Yet as if the court and the bar were enchanted by the sudden appearance of female figures, Mrs. Edgar, Mrs. Ludlow, Mrs. Turnbull and a Mrs. Thompson were contrary to the decision of the court, actually sworn and testified to the character of Mistress B. Some of the ladies have known her for two years (Paine has been dead one year) and one of them said, I think, four. Mistress B. had taught the children of some of these highly respectable ladies the French language, and they all agreed that her conduct was "scrupulously correct." Mr. Edgar, Mr. Few, and a Mr. Doyer corroborated the testimony of the ladies. Mr. Doyer had known Mistress B. six months, Mr. Few two years, but Mr. Edgar did not say how long he had had the honor of being acquainted with the defendant and associate of the detestable Paine. Mr. Fulton was also sworn, but he knew nothing of Mistress B. since she left Paris.

COMMUNICATION.

IF the American nation mean to make a firm and vigorous stand against that prime minister of hell, that destroying angel, Bonaparte, now is the time. We have at length arrived at such a stage of outrageous robbery and insult, that there can no longer be a doubt of the intentions of Bonaparte towards us. If we pass the point now reached, we need never look for resistance hereafter; if this most unparalleled robbery is put up with, without a declaration of war on our part, our infamy is sealed, and our independence gone forever. No resistance will ever be made should it not be made now; one act of perfidy and insult will follow another, until we shall find ourselves in a similar situation to what Spain was at the time her King and royal family were captured. Then when Bonaparte's legions, grown grey in blood, and athirst for plunder, shall have got a footing in the land, and the spirit of the American people abased in the dust by a long train of humiliations, it will be too late to think of resistance; we must quietly add another to the long list of conquered nations.

Let the American people picture to themselves what would be their feelings, if by some sudden and incomprehensible act, they were at once to see the standards of the tyrant floating upon the walls of their Capitol, and an upstart King of his making, issuing the proclamations and decrees of their subjugation from their President's palace.—Would not every heart glow with eager hatred and resentment? Would not every arm be uplifted to expel the robbers of their country's liberty? At this time they would, because honor, courage and patriotism yet exist among us. But let the proud spirit of our fathers once be humbled or destroyed by continual humiliations, and the scene which we have but as yet seen in imagination, may before the present generation passeth away, appear to us in the light of sad reality.

Let not this be slighted or made light of as a wild chimera, raised to excite alarms. Much more unlikely things have come to pass in our own day. History points out many of them. Could Charles the Vth, when carrying desolation through afflicted Europe, at the head of his conquering Spanish legions, ever have thought that an obscure but fortunate adventurer, from the obscure island of Corsica, should conquer the descendants of those brave men of whom he was the successful leader? Could the brave Batavians, who sustained a war of thirty years for freedom, and at length obtained it, ever suppose that their descendants and those of their oppressors, would both be enslaved by the same hand? Those things could not have entered the heart of man at that day, but we have seen them come to pass, and we know that a temporizing policy was the cause of the downfall of both Spain and Holland. In fact, French friendship is a composition of so vile and inconsistent a nature, that altho' its enmity is dangerous, its friendship is certain death. If war should not be declared, and we should become what we fear, we should deserve our fate, and no mortal would commiserate us. But if war should be declared, and through circumstances which we could not foresee, or by the decrees of heaven, we should be doomed to fall, the brave man and the patriot, altho' they might live to deplore the destruction of their country, yet would they have the rich consolation of knowing that they had done all that could be done by mortal man to save her.

It is the firm opinion of the writer of this article, that by war we have much to gain and nothing to lose. All that could be taken from us has been taken already, and he thinks it high time that retaliation should commence on our side.

This piece is not written to answer party purposes. Far from it. The writer always has been and still is a Democrat from principle, but he never was a Frenchman. He has always viewed with indignation the wrongs we have suffered from England; but they are at present hurried as it were, under the superior magnitude of those we have received from France, and should we either by non-resistance, or resistance, fall under the yoke of France, to have been a Federalist or Democrat, will not avail us; we shall be equally crushed in the overwhelming ruin; that war with France, at this time, would be most to our advantage I truly believe, and in such belief, without reference to party politics, I have written. That the measures which must be shortly adopted by our government, may be so inspired by wisdom as to bring us with honor out of our present difficulties, I both hope and wish.

A COLUMBIAN.

Divide and Destroy.—This is the maxim on which the whole political system of Bonaparte is founded. By creating and fomenting divisions he has been able to conquer countries and kingdoms; on which, had they been united, his armies could have made no impression. His emissaries in this country, true to their employer, have always attempted to divide the people, and to keep parties distinct. But we think the editor of the Baltimore Whig and his Washington correspondent, are the first who have been candid enough to acknowledge that the democrats make the celebration of the fourth of July a party business. And instead of making it a feast of union, prostrate it to the purpose of keeping up party distinction. We copy the following from the Whig, and recommend it to the attention of every thinking American.—N. Y. Ev. Post.

From the Baltimore Whig.

EXTRACT TO THE EDITOR.

"Washington, June 16.

From what I can learn, I am of opinion that the president will not call congress together.

Many of the republicans here wish again to celebrate the anniversary of our independence as a political sect; but they have been so badly supported by the heads of department and the executive, that numbers manifest an extraordinary degree of indifference; and I fear we shall not succeed as well as we did last year.

[We would not have published the preceding paragraph from a private letter, if we had not wished to impress on the minds of our republican administrators, the danger of pursuing such a system as will produce apathy in the republican ranks. Distinct principles, we believe, will always produce parties. We cannot remove the one without confounding the other; for they are mutual land marks.]

Valuable Farm for Sale.

I WILL sell the TRACT OF LAND on which I resided the last year, called "Buzzard's Island," lying on Potomac river, in Calvert county and nearly opposite to Bendict; containing by estimation seven hondred three and one quarter acres of fertile land as can be found in the state of Maryland, one third of which is in wood and very heavily timbered, and as well watered for the convenience of stock as any tract of its size in the state.

The arable part of this plantation is level and most of it covered with oyster shells and is divided into three fields each of which will produce two hundred barrels of corn, with a reserve of prime Tobacco land sufficient to grow fifty hogheads of Tobacco annually,
and with very little labor more meadow may be reclaimed than will be found sufficient—
No land can be better adapted to the growth of corn, tobacco and wheat, and few plantations hold out stronger inducements to stimulate an industrious man. It binds for a considerable distance on the river and lies nearly in a square.

Fish, oysters and wild fowl, are to be had at all times: Stock of every description, particularly sheep, thrives and improves wonderfully when removed to this land: a convincing proof of the nutritious quality of the grass which it produces in great abundance. The improvements are sufficient to accommodate a small family. A more particular description is not necessary, as a purchaser will naturally view the premises. The above estate is now under a tenement of one thousand dollars per annum. Terms accommodating, and made known by application to Walter W. Harwood, merchant, Upper Marlboro' Prince George County, or to the subscriber now in
